

the issues

The United States is experiencing turmoil on multiple fronts and in all of its social institutions. Instead of trying to fix each crack in the system, we propose an approach that focuses on the root of the problem.

The United States Constitution was written by people that could never imagine today's world. For our nation to truly reflect the People, we have to update the constitution!

the people

The Human Rights Effort ("THRE") is a grassroots movement founded on social evolution. Social evolution means as we evolve, we ensure that our institutions keep pace with the times.

We are made up for and by the People. We have a growing network of over 65,000 people that support updating the constitution.

the arguments

- The Framers wanted the constitution to change with the times.
- The convention will increase the people's trust in one another in leadership, and in their government.
- Every person wants to live a fair life, in a safe community with access to opportunities for personal and social development.
- The division in our nation has been fueled by political narratives that do not truly reflect the interests of all People.

the solution

We propose a constitutional convention, for and by the People.

We are creating the space for the People of today to contribute perspectives in a positive direction.

Article V of our current Constitution allows proposals for amendments. We are proposing an Amendment that calls for a constitutional convention.
